Chapter 1 by Story Wars

Black that was all I could see. Black that was all I remembered.

My heart's pounding, I'm frigid. I cannot feel my legs, where was I? As I turned my head I could barely make out a faint glow of a figure in a doorway. That is if it was a doorway. I tried to move... nothing... I tried to use my arms... nothing they just feel limp. I started struggling and yell, but in the cold I could not talk. Then I heard something, a sharp, but calming voice of a woman, "Don't try, you're home now and that's where you'll stay." At this I started to relax, think it was the truth. Then her voice came back this time a cold harsh tone, "I said stop you're scaring her don't move and she will not be hurt." At the sound of that I started to try struggling and moving again... but once again it was almost impossible in the cold. Eventually I gave up hope. Closing my eyes was the last thing I would remember.

Chapter 2 by Talivus

I woke up what felt like the next day. This time I'm not so panicky and laid there peacefully on the cold slab. This time, I gathered my thoughts to try to figure out where I am. I still couldn't move anything but my head. After looking around, I appear to be in a spherical room with only one entrance which seems to lead down a long hall. There were lights scattered along the walls to provide illumination.

feeling across my whole body. It's like I've been paralyzed for years. I cautiously stepped on to the marble floor. It was ice cold to the touch, but I powered through it as I slowly made my way down the corridor.

I have no recollection of who I was or where I am now. That woman was also nowhere to be found. In fact, nobody was around. It was eerily quiet but the sound of pitter patter of my feet along the cold floor.

The corridor seemed to stretch for ages, but eventually I came across a door. It was caked in ice, but with a few short hits, the ice broke. I gripped the handle and pulled with all my might. The door creaked open to reveal something that shocked me.
